Bridgehampton, N. Y., Aug. 3.—How he would make "America first and America efficient" will be explained by Charles E. Hughes in the course of the speeches he will deliver on his coast-to-coast trip. And after he has done this he will explain what he intends to do if elected—and he believes he will be, together with a Republican majority in Cengress—in the way of having constructive legislation passed to meet the economic conditions that the country will have to face after the war.

It is understood also that he will go into details respecting his criticism of the courty, as a first to make the country of the country of the country. I am glad to say that the outlook is most encouraging."

Attorney General Woodbury, on whom papers in the suit were served to-night, named Deputy Attorney General Merton E. Lewis to defend the action. Mr. Lewis represented the state during the arguments on the 1916 apportionment. The Rathbone suit will be heard at a special session of Part I, Supreme Court, in New York City Monday.

The action to have declared unconstitutional the 1907 apportionment is the second brought. When the first was filed it was withdrawn, as the act had been nullified by the 1916 apportionment, which was then technically in force.

Rathbone charges that the 1907 and Ciccolini, the block spiral to the propertion of the Porty-eighth Street Theatre has it that payers of The Powers, in "Somebody's Luggage," will open at that playhouse on August 28.

Ann Murdock, who severed an artery in her wrist on Tuesday, had sufficiently recovered yesterday to resume rehearsals in "Please Help Emily."

Rathbone charges that the 1907 apportionment is unconstitutional because a difference of 3,000 in population at the Palace Theatre next week after at the Palace Theatre next week after the Palace Theatre next week after cause a difference of 3,000 in population existed in two adjoining districts in Kings County when the act became a law. A similar difference in population in adjoining districts under the 1916 apportionment invalidated the act.

The effect of the successful outcome of the present suit, it was pointed out, would be to produce a state-wide confusion in district arrangements upon which the basis of representation is grounded. This, it said, was especially true of upstate districts.

This department has entered the second stage of service to Tribune readers. Primarily it was intended merely to separate the sheep of advertising from the goats-and hang a bell on the goats. But now it goes beyond mere identification. It embraces a human nature study of both sheep and goats. You are invited to assist. For every letter printed in this department describing experiences-pleasant or unpleasant-with advertisers of merchandise, excepting only patent medicines, The Tribune will send $2.00, payable in any merchandise of any Tribune advertiser. For the most important letter each month a special prize of $50.00, payable similarly, will be awarded. On the subject of guarantees of "ads," I came across a copy of "The Pictures Magazine," which claims to have "a million circulation and over five million interested readers," The following is from the editorial page:

The Pictures Magazine has a word to say to you about the patrons of its advertising columns. As you doubtless have noticed aiready, we are exceedingly particular about the kind of advertiser who places his business talk before our readers. We feel a responsibility in the matter, which, while not necessarily a legal responsibility, is nevertheless a moral responsibility. And it works both ways. Since we exercise the greatest care in selecting only those advertisers who are responsible and reputable for our readers, we feel that our readers in turn should be eager to take full advantage of the privilege of choosing from a selected list of the dealers from which to buy their goods.

choosing from a selected list of the detection choosing from a selected list of the detection.

Read their advertisements carefully and remember in your purchasing that it is good business to buy from a man who appreciates the value of your trade.

This all sounds fine, but let's see the kind of ads that are in the magazine. At first glance they appear as such that would not find a place in a high class magazine. Some of the ads seem on the face very misleading. Some examples follow:

Last January, when I was in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, I found it necessary to purchase some Durham Duplex razor blades, and for that purpose visited several hardware and cutlery establishments, without being able to find what I wanted.

Upon making inquiry at Casa Hermanny, I was informed by a courteous salesman that, while they did not have the Duplex blades in stock, he was sure that they were to be had in the city, and volunteered to have inquiries made over the telephone, if I cared to wait. While the telephonic inquiries were being made, being in doubt as to the result, I asked to be shown the ordinary razors which they had in stock. I had selected one, paid for it, and it had been delivered to me, wrapped up, when the information arrived that the Durham Duplex blades could be had at another establishment a few blocks away. When the salesman gave me this information he said that I could return the purchased razor if I chose to do so. But I have the razor, and I treasure is as a very pleasant (and useful) souvenir of the commercial courtesy of Casa Hermanny, Rio de Janeiro.

The inclosed clipping is from The Designer for July. I also inclose a curler for your inspection. How much strength do you think would be imparted to the hair from this electrified device?

About as much as from a hairpin. It isn't electrified or even magnetized. But "guaranteed unbreakable" indicates commendable industry on the part of some one in searching for a talking point. That's undoubtedly a safe claim. Most metals can hold their own against a wisp of hair.

Some time age I had occasion to purchase two colored negligees in the store of John Wanamaker. Before I even had time to unpack the parcel I lost my mother. Three weeks or more passed before I took the parcel back to Wanamaker's for credit. When the girl in charge of the credit department opened the parcel I was mortified to see that the contents were very badly crushed; but she looked up at me, saw the mourning clothing I wore, and without a word handed me a credit check. That seems so thoroughly fair that I trust you will see fit to publish the above, so that I may feel as though I have done all I conscientiously can to show my gratitude to those who treated me so well.
